

...there were shining gold bars that shone brightly in the vaults of the Battenburg Bank. The bars were vain as they knew how important they were, with Bank officials and others inspecting them everyday.

Someone else who wanted to inspect them closely was Ludwig Fratzke* a thief and collector of many priceless books, paintings and jewels.

But as successful as he was, he was also forgetful, as in letting the milk boil over and leaving the cat outside all night.

* Who is related to Von Klaus and Baron Von Rudolph Fratzke. See the previous two issues. Editor.